Department of Communication, Media & Theatre hires student intern

MISSISSIPPI STATE, Miss.— July 22, 2025 —The Department of Communication, Media & Theatre at Mississippi State University has hired Lawren Williams, a small business owner and university student, as its public relations intern.

In this role, Williams will provide support to the public relations team in a variety of ways. Williams will assist with media research, content creation and media outreach, as well as with event planning and coordination.

“We look forward to having Lawren join our team. We believe she will be a tremendous asset with her history of hard work and dedication,” said Josh White, director of the Department of Communication, Media & Theatre.

Prior to joining the department, Lawren managed social media for Taproot Pottery and started her own art business, Lawren's Creatives, in January 2025. Her experience in content creation and small business communications supports her work in public relations and community engagement.

Williams is a senior at Mississippi State University studying communications with a concentration in public relations. The Mississippi State Department of Communication, Media & Theatre currently serves approximately 600 majors. The students choose from the following concentrations: broadcasting & digital journalism, communication & media studies, print & digital journalism, public relations, and theatre.
